

Marianne Williamson...from p. 3

inequality in our country—Bernie Sanders.

These kinds of convictions also brought her to Fairfield. You might think that the Sanders campaign sponsored her to speak here, but she actually booked the Sondheim and came here on her own dime, just because she felt Fairfield would be receptive to this message. Similarly, I got involved to help produce her event here only because I felt that a thought leader of her caliber deserved full support in creating a successful event. I ended up getting way more than I bargained for in the process—a serious wake-up call.

All of us make personal choices based on our priorities. For some, political activism might not be the right fit, while for others, the political/social/environmental arena is their favorite domain. But when we experience the fervent passion of a soul like Marianne Williamson in action, it can't help but inspire us to re-examine and renew our ever-present choice: to direct our God-given gifts to serve the unfolding evolution of the planet in the best way we can. Marianne's close was perfect. "You pray, you meditate...you can't help but kick ass."

For those that missed her talk, there will be rebroadcast of the event with time and location to be announced shortly.
